THE First Presbyterian church was the scene of the wedding of Miss Jean Hennigh, daughter of Mrs. Howard Hennigh of 337 South Prospect street, and Charles Wesley Gatewood, son of Mr. and Mrs. Ray Gatewood of near Clanton, Saturday afternoon. Closed church was observed for the single ring ceremony read at 2:30 o'clock by the pastor, Rev. Howard L. Cleveland, before an altar adorned with Easter lilies and palms and lighted with tall, white tapers.

Mrs. Harry T. Williams, organist, played a program of wedding music including "My God and I," "Always," "Evening Star," "Liebesträume" and "I Love You Truly," and Miss Martha Ford sang "The Lord's Prayer."

The bride's brother-in-law, William Hennigh of Milwaukee, Wis., escorted her to the altar and gave her in marriage and her mother, of honor and only attendant, was Mrs. Jack Sims. George Brown served as best man, for Mr. Gatewood and ushers were William White of Clarksville, Pa., Richard Garfield, Jack Sims and John Price. Her flowers were a nosegay of yellow and white daisies. Mrs. Sims' dress was of yellow button's linen with white eyelet trim and completing her costume was a half-hat of white straw. Her flowers were a corsage of daisies.

All Out of Step but OPA

ONE peculiarity about the office of price administration has become so noticeable that even its best friends may have to mention it.

It is the only organization in the United States, in fact it is the only organization in American history, which claims to know how to run everybody's business.

It puts it in the position of being its own expert, because it knows as much or more about any given business than the experts who are trying to run it.

In any given case, therefore, the OPA can consult with itself and emerge with the conclusion that the people running the business are wrong and it, the OPA, is right. This it has done.

Furthermore, any dissent from this judgment is punishable by an immediate campaign of publicity and harassment paid for out of public funds, some of which were contributed by the miscreant who has incurred OPA's bad will.

It is a singular state of affairs, this arrangement that finds everybody out of step but the OPA and its friends. It is singular because all this has been done as part of government, and government is supposed to represent everybody, not just the temporary pets of whatever appointed jobholders happen to be riding high at the moment.

When did it become the unchallenged fashion in Washington for public agencies to abuse the people whose tolerance and taxes support them?

Reconverting Our Ideas

IN A RECENT speech about outworn ideas of finance that handicap enterprise and employment, Emil Schram, president of New York Stock Exchange, said the United States needs a "reconversion of thinking" on the part of government, management and labor.

In a broader sense, it might be said there is need for reconverting our ideas about almost everything. The reconversion would not mean adopting something new in all cases. Many times it would entail a return to something old suspended or modified by circumstances which no longer exist.

An inventory of ideas, if one were taken, would reveal that many of those now having great effect originated in the circumstances of depression and war. Many of these, moreover, were not planned policies, but improvisations. Carried over into an era of postwar inflation, they are incongruous. Moreover, they are dangerous.

Mr. Schram points to the need for new capital to create peacetime jobs, a need whose fulfillment is blocked by government policies developed to deal with conditions no longer in existence. He points to the dangerous carryover from wartime lend-lease of huge foreign loans made on a basis of politics and says foreign investment is the rightful task of private capital, not public funds. Yet, in his specialized field of finance, as in the specialized fields of management and labor relations these new-old ideas are shunted aside by theories and practices which may have nothing to sustain them but momentum development under circumstances no longer in existence.

State Medicine Is the Issue

IT IS a tragic misfortune for the American people that extremists are doing most of the talking in the argument over ways and means of providing more adequate medical care. They misrepresent the issue, which is whether or not the United States is to institute a plan of state medicine.

Everyone is in fundamental agreement on one point: that more adequate medical care for a greater number of citizens is desirable. The differences arise over the means of providing more adequate care. The bulk of the medical profession favors development of voluntary methods which already have produced tremendous improvement in health security. These are the familiar methods of prepayment of medical costs and insurance.

The alternative offered by the profession's critics is state medicine, calling for involuntary payments from the public, a new division of federal bureaucracy and political control of the medical profession. This is the real issue. It is clouded deliberately and maliciously by persons who try to make it appear that the issue is whether or not to give more Americans more adequate medical care. They profess to be interested in a goal which is not at issue at all, when what they are really interested in is the means.

The medical profession has only one weapon with which to defend itself against the attempted political invasion of its prerogatives—the confidence of the people themselves. It is a battle for another consent. On one side are the doctors asking for the right to keep their profession out of politics. On the other side are the politicians itching for the privilege of getting their hands on the doctors and on the vast public funds that would accrue under state medicine.

News Behind the News

More on Democratic Campaign Errors.

WASHINGTON, April 22—And another thing about Democratic campaign strategy. Not only have the party chiefs exhibited confusion in a series of ridiculous "mistakes" as to whether they are running Mr. Truman or Congress this year, but they have been building up a sideline campaign on the House of Representatives. First one member of the Roosevelt family was trotted out as a prospective candidate for governor of New York; a young man without previous experience or political pretensions, who, if he wanted to start as his father did at that age, would run for the town council of Astoria, Ore. This was done by an independent minor newspaper in New York, the same newspaper which, incidentally, led the fight against the Truman administration in the Pauley matter, smearing it with oil. While it is an indecorable publication, it always pretends to represent what the late Mr. Roosevelt might want.

Truman at Hyde Park

Then, Mr. Truman went to Hyde Park in a major memorial demonstration and made a speech supporting Roosevelt policies, and all the avenue of popular publication, the newspapers and magazines, have carried articles and pictures, most of them his fourth term campaign picture. In other words, there has been sudden recrudescence of interest in Roosevelt by those most interested in the coming election—for his first annual memorial day, but also just as their campaigns are getting started.

Now, there is nothing surprising about candidates running on coalition borrowed from history. A lot of politicians ran many years after Washington's death upon his memory, and I have no doubt 20 years from now (if things are still the same as they are now), some child may run for office claiming Mr. Roosevelt once said that he was a good man.

The point of protest I wish to make is that this is a new age. The problems facing it are entirely different from those Mr. Roosevelt faced, most ineffectively. I do not wish to argue now whether Mr. Roosevelt was right or wrong, only to point to the absurdity of politicians trying to wrap themselves in his memory, instead of facing the issues which now confront this world.

The issues are more critical than any in the history of time and space. After Washington, elections decided only issues of thirteen states and markets; and in Roosevelt's time, forty-eight states and 18 inch guns. Now they will decide the fate of the world and the atomic bomb. We are in world politics up to our necks and everywhere we are confronted with the most vital—and no doubt conclusive—issue of international relations versus fundamental democracy. It is our way of life against theirs. We should know it. They certainly know it. Now, what would Mr. Roosevelt have done about that? He never faced that problem. He can't answer from the grave. It is up to present day politicians to give their own answers.

In domestic affairs, the issues are apt to be equally decisive, and decisions made will no doubt be conclusive as to where this world is going. We have the issues of inflation which could rob the people of all the value of their work, the issues of control through pressure groups and vested interests which are threatening if not undermining the effectiveness of democracy.

Debt Situation Changes

It was one thing to talk about the debt of the people when it was twenty billion dollars, when Roosevelt came in. Quite another policy may be necessary now when it is nearly three hundred billion dollars.

The problem of taxation is one thing when it is designed to conserve the wealth; quite another after the wealth is confiscated. The old problems of capitalism such as prices and competition have been inflated also to a point where we all know it is a question now of how much more the business will stand. It is one thing to start putting in it but some change of tactics are called for if you have been blowing into it for fifteen years. Who can say that Mr. Roosevelt, who blew himself entirely out of wind trying to get an inflation started, without success, during the early years of his administration, would not, if alive today, turn around, seeing what the war had done to everything, and recommend the opposite course?

In any event, the Roosevelt administration is over. The taking of his name by politicians for issues in the past year and from building up of any campaign around his grave is a shameful avoidance of responsibilities we face today—greater than any Roosevelt faced because these are apt to be final.

Some say, and wisely: Let us leave Roosevelt to history. Others say: History is apt to be short. Short or long it will be a new history and it will be what we, in the world, make it. We certainly can not make much of it by rattling skeletons.

Does UNRRA Provide the Pretzels?

Furnishings in the hall where the UN Security Council has been meeting include three bars, one a 40-footer.

It must be refreshing, in the midst of all that diplomatic parlance, to hear these simple, familiar phrases—"What's yours?" and "Make mine the same."

Three bars, thanks to the foresight of their American hosts, delegations involved in international squabbles are not subjected to the embarrassment of drinking with each other.

In fact, not only are facilities provided for each of the disputing parties, but also a third where non-partisans can retire for the purpose of imbibing neutral spirits.

Thus far, only one flaw has been revealed in the elaborate preparations of the planning committee. That came the afternoon Gromy found they didn't give curb service.

German Gold in World Bank

Large Deposit Has Escaped Allies Thus Far.

By FLORA LEWIS

Associated Press Writer

BASEL, Switzerland.—A large sum of German money which the Allies have so far been unable to touch is on deposit in the Bank of International Settlements in Basel.

The bank's general secretary, Raffaele Piloti, refuses to say how much German gold and assets the bank now holds and Allied diplomats said they haven't yet been able to find out.

However, figures published in the bank's annual report indicate that it has as a very minimum $50,000,000 belonging to Germany and probably considerably more in accounts which the report does not specify according to countries.

The bank holds a special, though somewhat precarious international position, under the international position, under the 1930 Hague agreement, which set it up to facilitate World War reparations payments. It is immune from freezing regulations and outside officials interpret its charter as exempting it from being liable to confiscation of funds for reparations in the new peace settlement.

Japan was an active member of the bank. The First National Bank of New York City is the American member.

Allied diplomats say the bank will have to be dissolved eventually because its functions are in a large part duplicated by the new Bretton Woods fund. They predict a tough international wrangle when liquidation begins.

At the last counting, the bank's gold holdings alone were about $31,000,000.

Its president, during the war, was Thomas H. McKittrick, an American, but the most influential of its directors was Walther Funk, Nazi finance minister on trial at Nuremberg. Funk was able to vote the shares of Austria, Danzig and other occupied lands.

Apparently these shares as well as the accounts of Latvia, Lithuania and Estonia have been sitting untouched. Russia was not a member, and it remains to be seen whether the Soviet Union will claim the assets of the Baltic States.

History Anonymous

By EDWARD E. BOMAR

ONE of history's big writing jobs, a chronicle of the Army's part in World War II, will be ready in about five years.

A series of preliminary volumes, destined to be rewritten, already have been published. The latest covers the first seven days of fighting for the Omaha beachhead in the Normandy landing.

At work on the final history are possibly 500 officers, enlisted men and civilian historians, culled from reports, interviews, photographs and drawings which in many instances originated under enemy fire.

The result is expected to be a monumental narrative of probably 120 volumes, the most comprehensive chronicle of any war and the first for any conflict in which American troops have been engaged.

If five years seems long, note that the official history of World War I is not ready even yet. It is a compilation of battle orders and other significant documents, rather than a narrative, and is now expected to be completed in a year or so and to require some 28 volumes altogether.

The 128-volume collection of records of the Civil War did not appear until 1902. With plans made in advance for the first time, the Army set out from the start to make a complete record of World War II, placing historians in each war theater headquarters and with each field army, air force and technical service. In the later stages teams of historians went into action with combat troops.

Gen. George C. Marshall, then chief of staff, directed the prompt writing of preliminary accounts of individual campaigns, for the special benefit of wounded men. These have been found valuable, officials said, in preparing the final work.

Others of the preliminary chronicles were accounts of the first phase of the North-Africa campaign, the Papuan operation

Child Guidance

MANSFIELD, Mass.—Reverse implication was given to the term "child guidance" recently when Barbara Balkam, nine-year-old fourth grade student of this community, corrected the Houghton Mifflin company of Boston on a textbook error.

Discovering that a map of the world had misplaced the equator line, Barbara told her teacher, who, in turn, advised the publishers. Net result for Barbara was a formal acknowledgment and compliment from the publishers.

In the Pacific, three monographs on the fighting in Italy and the story of Merrill's Marauders in Burma.

All but the first two were initially prepared in the field. Photographs were supplied by signal corps combat cameramen and civilian news photographers, a number of whom met death in making daring shots.

In accordance with Army policy, the authors of the official histories are anonymous, but some top-flight professional historians have had a hand thus far in collection and writing of actual narratives.

Crystal Growing Comes Next

by FRANK CAREY

OPPORTUNITY for the world to create an entirely new industry—artificial production of quartz crystals that are vital to radio—has been provided by German wartime research.

American technological experts report the Germans developed a technique for "growing" in laboratories the same kind of crystals which occur in nature.

Virtually the entire world supply of natural quartz crystals now comes from mines in Brazil.

During the war, extraordinary measures were undertaken to increase the production of the tiny electrically sensitive crystals which constitute the heart of a radio transmitter and also are used in the depth-sounding apparatus of submarines.

It takes nature about 100 years to "grow" quartz crystals, formed by the action of sun and rain upon silica, or sand. The crystals often are embedded in rocky formations and difficult to mine.

The U. S. technical intelligence branch (TIB) says quartz crystals were grown artificially in German laboratories in several weeks.

At present, the report said, the German artificial technique is 10 times more costly than the process of mining the crystals. But it added "there is, of course, a probability that further research and development would greatly reduce the cost."

The technical experts described the German process as follows: A "seed" of quartz crystal—a very small natural crystal—is placed in one part of a machine. A large quantity of silica, or sand, is placed in another part.

The machine is then filled with water under pressure and sufficient heat is applied to melt the sand. Gradually, the silica dissolves in the water. The water is kept circulating around the "seed" crystal, which does not dissolve. Instead, the crystal slowly grows by attracting to itself constituents of the silica solution.

The report said the Germans turned to research on artificial crystals when they were hard-pressed during the war for natural ones.

"Great efforts were made to keep the crystals (from Brazil) out of the hands of the Germans," the report said. "Although these efforts were only partially successful, the crystals slowly grew. The Germans had only a very limited supply and their radio equipment was consequently less satisfactory."

The Loudnow on Mexican Baseball

"MEXICAN baseball isn't bad," declared Lou Louden, the old-time baseball writer, collector and pocket fence painter today, "it's a Vera Cruz southpaw in my younger days, you know."

"We expressed some surprise that, in view of this experience with Elmer, the Mexican ball possibly be making a drive for more American ball players."

"What I like about baseball in Mexico," went on, "is its color, mood and pace. There's no hurry. It's nothing for a game to start a mile late and if a contest is stopped in a hot place, a dispute with the umpire it is often impossible to get it in motion again."

"The whole spirit is different. More relaxed and dangerous. I remember we had a game there where I carried a guitar all through the game and often left his position with a row of teeth and went to the grandstand to serenade the seniors. Mexicans love horses, you know, and in my time the whole team would ride along in a parade on horseback. Some fans carried a way too."

Elmer mused a few seconds. "Some of the Mexican ball fans can be tough homies. They thought nothing in those days of whipping a six-footer and bludgeoning away if you muffed a fly or hit into a double. My most exciting experience came one day when I was at bat with the out and the bases full. A big fellow reached out and in a loud voice demanded a 'bunt'."

"What did you do?" we asked.

"Hit one," he replied. "What else could I? The guy was Pancho Villa."

We had a manager once who was born in California. His name was and he always had a position near the pitcher on a big ball. He played with a cold silver bridle and spurs in the saddle. When a pitcher was off form, he would gallop around him with a gun in hand, bellowing orders. That's why I don't league. Horses in a pitcher's box always make me nervous."

"Baseball in Mexico had its nice spots, though. It's only hours to play nine innings and we always got two days to play a doubleheader. And they always held a ballgame between the games of a twin bill. Right in the diamond. Considerable confusion would result. I remember once the official scorer credited a ball with a stolen base and in the same inning our third baseman was hooked off the bag because he wouldn't attack a fellow who was a red flag in his face."

WHY, GUVNOR?

Never in its long history has any governor made any claims to any knowledge whatever concerning the lingerie situation. In fact, a New York State executive might be presumed to be first to deny it.

Connecticut is distinctly a long-drawn red-channel under shirt state. It is only here that people throw used the word "lingerie." Whatever a Connecticut statesman might or none would expect him to become a lingerie czar, a Judge Landis of the sciences. Tell us, ain't so, Bob; tell us it ain't so.

A Bird Walk

By TRUMAN TWILL

Out of a clear sky, clunk, there was this invitation to go for a bird walk, first we ever received. Confidentially, we are not the type who one would pick to hobnob with birds.

This invitation was exceptional. It came from a lady whose interest in birds is academic. She just wonders why they teeter on wires in the winds when they could be lying comfortably in the flat of their backs in quiet roof gutters. She just wonders and wonders.

The bird walk got under way. "Don't get so close to the buildings," the lady advised, "or you will increase the percentages of sawing and sawing. Remember, pigeons are jocular and will do anything for a laugh."

Soon, we were away from the built-up street and getting into the neighborhood of the "This," observed the lady, "is where we will get some of the gosh-danged birds that sit on two legs. Watch sharp now, and you will see one come popping out of a door like a yellow hammer flailing out at the bole of a rotten apple tree, which is, incidentally, a bird walk, which is, incidentally, a bird walk, which is, incidentally, a bird walk."

I remember from a book about birds, that the only way to get a bird to sit on a perch is to offer it a piece of food. I remember from a book about birds, that the only way to get a bird to sit on a perch is to offer it a piece of food. I remember from a book about birds, that the only way to get a bird to sit on a perch is to offer it a piece of food.

Safely through the hangout of the public, the next zone of fascinating probabilities was feeding stands at the edge of town. "Here," our guide, making a broad gesture, "are some of the liveliest birdbrains that I've seen. I went to Washington to become a statesman, but I have it on the impeccable word of an old bird that the pun of this neighborhood is what goes on in these places in the parked cars of an event would make a pair of love birds seem like the gnat and Toto, or is it Tojo, by comparison. Storky, you might as well admit you are mad as hell."

There was a brief interruption while a bird fisher waddled past, chomping his bill and casting his head like Life-Begins-At-The-End. "There's trouble with slipping dentures," he complained. The guide, "goes to the bird and himself up with chessburs, trying to get the first bite off the roof of his mouth. It's a remarkable what a lifelong acquaintance with our feathered friends teaches one if one keeps one's eyes open and one's beak shut."

Quite so, lady, but about the bird walk. Wasn't it silly to start a bird walk after dark in the first place? How could anyone see what was up in the sky after dark? What was this?

"No," said our guide. "This is no joke. This is a chick takes a dumb peep for a small in the springtime, that's no joke, just a bird walk. No ulterior motive, nothing but fresh, clear air. Anyway, the bird walk is over. Shut up and phone for a cab."

And that's the only bird we ever used Judge, honest.

TILT FOR LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR GROWING

By The Associated Press
COLUMBUS, O., April 22.—The battle between Fred J. Milligan and Paul M. Herbert, candidates for the Republican nomination for lieutenant governor waxed warmer today as Milligan charged his opponent was attempting to ride on the coat-tails of former Gov. John W. Bricker, unopposed candidate for the U. S. Senatorial nomination.

Milligan said Herbert had told a Republican meeting in Cadiz last Friday night that Bricker asked him to be a candidate again for lieutenant governor. Herbert has served three terms in the office.

"In fact, last Aug. 17, while in the Army and four months before my opponent became a candidate, I was encouraged by Governor Bricker to become a candidate for lieutenant governor and received his pledge of support. My candidacy was announced two months later in reliance upon my opponent's word to me and to others that he would not run for lieutenant governor."

When Milligan announced his candidacy, Herbert was flitting with the possibility of again seeking the nomination for governor in another battle with Atty. Gen. Thomas J. Herbert. Later, as a party harmony proposition Republican leaders induced Paul M. Herbert to withdraw from the gubernatorial race. Paul then announced his candidacy for lieutenant governor.

Milligan said today that "Governor Bricker never asked me to withdraw either before or after my opponent became a candidate."

Stone was supported under the arms by Justices Black and Reed. The court abruptly recessed shortly before 2 p. m.

A court attaché said at 1:58 p. m. that a doctor had been summoned. The interruption came just after Justice Reed had completed delivery on an opinion.

There was a moment of silence, and then discussion behind the judges' bench with justices on either side of the centrally-seated Stone speaking to him in low tones.

Stone, who had spoken several times in delivering opinions, was reading a paper at the time.

As other justices talked with him, Stone spoke out in a voice audible to the front rows of the courtroom.

The 73-year-old justice was heard to say: "The case should be stayed . . . and investigation."

The meaning of his words was not immediately clear to those in the court room.

Stone appeared somewhat pale but not unnaturally so.

Ordinarily the court recesses from 2 to 2:30 p. m. for lunch. The interruption today came about 1:45 p. m.

Officials later said Justice Stone had suffered an attack of indigestion.

VANDENBERG TO AIR BRITISH LOAN STAND

By The Associated Press
WASHINGTON, April 22.—British loan proposals counted heavily today on the help they expect—but weren't entirely sure they would get—from Senators Vandenberg (R-Mich.) and McNamara (D-Mich.).

Today's senate session was called specifically for Vandenberg to state his position on the $2,000,000,000 loan proposal before he leaves tomorrow with Secretary Byrnes for the Paris meeting of the foreign ministers' council.

Democratic leaders had wanted to take the day off to give members more time to get back from Europe. But Vandenberg, chairman of the Senate Republican conference, on the line for their side of the case led them to arrange the meeting.

LaGuardia's Food May Aid Marshall in Chinese Truce

By DEWITT MACKENZIE
AP Foreign Affairs Analyst
The civil war which has broken out in Manchuria between Chinese Communists and Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek's Kuomintang government forces is hourly becoming more critical.
The situation might easily develop into a fratricidal struggle which would engulf all China with its five hundred millions.
It is a tense moment. There may be a chance of halting the conflict, but if there is it would seem to rest on the square shoulders of Gen. George C. Marshall, America's special envoy, who has just returned from Chungking to the United States to employ his vast skill as a Dewitt Mackenzie conciliator in trying to effect a truce.
Actually an armistice would be just the beginning of most difficult bargaining. The cleavage between the Chinese Communists and the totalitarian government of Chiang Kai-shek is wide.
One thing seems clear. The Chinese Communists, who are exceedingly strong in northern China and Manchuria, have every intention of consolidating that under their own jurisdiction. This doesn't necessarily mean that agreement with the Nationalist government isn't possible, for the Communists might be willing to participate in a heavily liberalized federal government which would recognize Communist state-rights in the disputed territory. However, the greatest obstacle to such an arrangement lies in the fact that the Communists are claiming an exceedingly rich area—both in natural resources and development—and the Nationalists naturally covet it.
But Marshall brought about one truce between the warring factions, and he may achieve another. Having accomplished that his troubles as mediator may really begin, and in this connection he can't escape the feeling that he may get indirect but nevertheless far-reaching support from an unusual source—F. H. LaGuardia, director general of the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration.
What I'm driving at is this: China is in the grip of one of the most terrible famines of history. Thousands are dying daily, and many millions are facing death by starvation. Hunger is a breeder of trouble, for there's nothing which can do more to stir passions and render folk incapable of rational thinking.
The UNRRA is shipping food to China, and if the relief gets there fast enough and in sufficient quantities, the easement may be reflected in the political situation, and be equally welcomed by all factions.
EASTER SEAL JUAN DIES

YOUR HEALTH
By HERMAN BUNDSEN, M.D.
Balanced Breakfasts

What kind of breakfast should you have? Big breakfast, little breakfast or none at all? This is not a question to be decided by an empty-meeting-murderer. Nor is the answer to be found in personal preference.
There are definite considerations of health which show that everybody needs a real and substantial meal on which to start the day.
Those who have studied the problem think that the breakfast should make up about one-fourth of the total food needs for the day. That means one-fourth of the calories or heat value, one-fourth of the protein, which is the material necessary for building new tissues and repairing worn-out ones, and one-fourth of the vitamins and minerals.
Some people get into the habit of omitting breakfast in an effort to lose weight but that is the wrong way of reducing weight. Their energy would be held up on a more even keel if they divided the food they eat among three meals a day rather than two.
If breakfast is skipped, the necessary food will have to be eaten at the other two meals in order to maintain health and well-being. Many persons who skip breakfast make the problem worse by grabbing a bite of whatever is handy for lunch and then making the evening meal supply practically all of the nutrients needed.
Planning a well-balanced diet with three meals a day is not a very difficult task if a few simple principles are followed, but the fewer the meals, the greater the danger that the food eaten will fall short of furnishing the needed proteins, vitamins and minerals.
Many people say that they just do not feel hungry at breakfast time. But in most instances, this is because they arise too late for breakfast and must hurry off to work or to keep some appointment.
Very few persons skip breakfast if they go to bed early enough, a time as to give them a sufficient interval to digest, read the newspaper, and perhaps do a little work in the garden before starting the day's activities.
It is not astonishing that people who have eaten a heavy meal the night before and must be awakened in the morning have little desire to eat breakfast.
Breakfast can be planned from six food items, fruit, cereal, eggs, toast with fortified margarine or butter, jam and a beverage which means milk for children.
In many ways, your body is like the engine of your car. It takes fuel in the form of food and transmutates it into energy, the energy which you use to accomplish your day's work. It is just as reasonable to expect your car to start on an empty tank as to suppose that your body can furnish energy for the morning's activities without proper food.
A good breakfast can work wonders in the way you feel. Try it and see how much it adds to your contentment and the ease with which you perform your forenoon tasks.
North America has more species of game birds than any other continent.

TOKYO, April 22 — George Atcheson Jr., career diplomat and political advisor to General MacArthur, has replaced Maj. Gen. W. F. Marquat as chairman and American member of the Allied four-power council for Japan.
Supreme headquarters announced Atcheson's appointment yesterday and intimated that the state department man had been slated all along to replace General Marquat, although no mention of impermanency was made when the soldier was named a month ago.
Atcheson returned from the United States last Monday and sat in on the two stormy sessions of the council during the week. They are considered bad omens.

STRENGTH IS SPOTTY IN TODAY'S TRADING

NEW YORK, April 22.—Relatively strong spots persisted in today's stock market although many leaders acted a bit faltering. Some potential purchasers held aloof to await OPA developments in congress. The coal strike continued to dim sentiment. Accounts were trimmed here and there because of last week's average advance to a 15-cent peak. Dealings picked up now and then after the opening but slow-downs were plentiful. Gains running to a point or more were a shade in the majority near the fourth hour. Timken-Detroit added several more points on the split-up proposal. Improved most of the day were Peoples Gas, Santa Fe, Northern Pacific, U. S. Rubber, Montgomery Ward and International Harvester.
